At this time, there is no word as to whether this will change in a future update, though Psyonix has not suggested this is in their plans at this time. Most games lack total cross-play making Rocket League unique and the simplicity of getting the Rocket League cross-play to work is fantastic. The PlayStation 4 and Xbox One both have exclusive vehicle frames and PC users will see a different vehicle frame instead. Go to the Main Menu On the Friends List, go to the Friends tab Select the Add Friend by Epic ID option Type in an Epic ID to search, find then send a friend request to that person This does mean the people you want to add need to give you their Epic ID or to make it easier, you could just tell them to do you instead! If they've sent over a friend request, you can accept it just like with a normal friends request. This is done by going to the Notifications tab found on the Friends List then clicking accept on the Friend Request. Rocket League Crossplay Limitations Cosmetic While full Rocket League cross-platform play is available, there are some minor differences between PC and each console too. Without turning on the option it's not possible to play with friends on other consoles as well. So make sure any messages you type out are not contributing to an already toxic Rocket League community. If this blog post was helpful let us know so we can write more posts about Rocket League! Comment below what your favorite Quick Chat message is. This means you can play online with people from other consoles as well at any time you wish. It's a great addition to the game which matches well with the split-screen feature. The in-game items and account progress is locked to one account meaning they can't be transferred to different platforms as well. Players cannot trade with friends between different platforms so someone on Xbox One cannot send something to a friend on the Nintendo Switch. Some games might allow for this but Rocket League cross-save or cross-progression doesn't let players move their progress between platforms. This is a purely cosmetic issue but not one that will both most players. What this then is that while a PlayStation 4 user might be using the Sweet Tooth car, a PC user won't see that model and will see it as a Merc instead. But what if you want to communicate with your teammates without using your voice? There are many ways that you can use Rocket League's chat system, depending on which console or platform you're using. In this blog post, we will cover how to type and use Quick Chat in Rocket League on PC, PlayStation 4, Xbox One, and Nintendo Switch! How To Type In Chat On Rocket League PC If you are playing Rocket League on PC, you can use a keyboard to chat with your teammates by pressing T and you can talk to the game including the opponents by pressing Y. These two options are called team chat and global chat respectively. So to communicate in-game via typing all you have to do is follow these two steps: Press either T or Y depending on who you want to see your message Type your desired message and press the enter key Congratulations you now know how to type in Rocket League! Pretty easy right? One important thing to note is that only PC players will be able to see your typed messages and vice versa. This makes it very easy to communicate with teammates and opponents. Trading is perfectly fine between people on the same platform, it just doesn't work when it's cross-platform. In-game voice chat doesn't work across platforms and the typed chat also doesn't work. Playing with friends on other platforms can then be done through the Friends menu just like with friends on the same platform. How to Disable Crossplay for Rocket League If you want to disable Rocket League cross-play platform play once the game session is over, the process is the same as above. It also notes that cross-platform trading is not possible. To make it easier, this is a list of things that are linked to a single account. Players cannot trade with friends between different platforms so someone on Xbox One cannot send something to a friend on the Nintendo Switch. Some games might allow for this but Rocket League cross-save or cross-progression doesn't let players move their progress between platforms. This is a purely cosmetic issue but not one that will both most players. What this then is that while a PlayStation 4 user might be using the Sweet Tooth car, a PC user won't see that model and will see it as a Merc instead. But what if you want to communicate with your teammates without using your voice? There are many ways that you can use Rocket League's chat system, depending on which console or platform you're using. In this blog post, we will cover how to type and use Quick Chat in Rocket League on PC, PlayStation 4, Xbox One, and Nintendo Switch! How To Type In Chat On Rocket League PC If you are playing Rocket League on PC, you can use a keyboard to chat with your teammates by pressing T and you can talk to the game including the opponents by pressing Y. These two options are called team chat and global chat respectively. So to communicate in-game via typing all you have to do is follow these two steps: Press either T or Y depending on who you want to see your message Type your desired message and press the enter key Congratulations you now know how to type in Rocket League! Pretty easy right? One important thing to note is that only PC players will be able to see your typed messages and vice versa. This makes it very easy to communicate with teammates and opponents. Trading is perfectly fine between people on the same platform, it just doesn't work when it's cross-platform. In-game voice chat doesn't work across platforms and the typed chat also doesn't work. Playing with friends on other platforms can then be done through the Friends menu just like with friends on the same platform. How to Disable Crossplay for Rocket League If you want to disable Rocket League cross-play platform play once the game session is over, the process is the same as above. Rocket League is a competitive game but it's also a social game which is great for friends and the ability to play with others on different platforms is perfect for Rocket League.
